

BAILEY, Liberty Hyde, 1858- "Dean Bailey", to countless Cornell men. Eminent botanist and farming advocate, known worldwide to his contemporaries. His far-traveled scientific quests have gained wonders for him of which to dream and sing, and for people on the land untold benefits of applied science. Explorer and curator, author and editor, distinctive in appearance, voice, and gesture, as a speaker, it will not be forgotten that the funds for painting his striking portrait, hung at Cornell in 1943, were made possible by the National Nurserymen's Association and by other groups of growers of potatoes, vegetables, fruits, seeds, and of ornamental flowers, plants, and trees. For a record of how he "has bridged the old and the new" in his experience, see the illustrated article above, p. , by H. B. Knapp. -- R. W. Stimson.

Bailey, L. H. N. Y.