 Mater eighteen years; and at the University of Illinois, 1938- A student of general as well as ag. education. In his own words, "there has always been a strong desire to keep agricultural education balanced with other forms of education, and fully integrated in the public school system." His emphasis has been on the welfare of the farm people, more than on the technical aspects of agriculture.
 Careful, systematic, and thorough research student; Prolific and lucid writer of books, magazine articles, and bulletins on ag. ed. He is a master in handling conferences, ^{and} inspiring teachers in the classroom; and he has keen judgment in evaluating teaching and community programs.
 In general, he is a firm adherent to the clear-cut principles and philosophies in which he believes, a wise counselor, and a warm-hearted genial friend to all his students and colleagues. -- A. W. Nolan
